BEFORE TAKING

By Hal E. Roach. ✓

MAY 28 1924 ✓

A wealthy man afflicted with the gout is being attended to by several specialists. During this examination, Herman and Charlie in hard luck seeking something to eat enter the house through a rear window and while attempting to gain the desired food, they are surprised by the butler who mistaking them for some of the expert force working on his employer, ushers the two into the room where the consultation is being held. The comedy arises from their being presented, and their efforts to render professional advice and service.

Charlie and Herman fear exposure at any moment. They ask to be permitted to withdraw for a private consultation and on being granted the permission they manage to make their exit and escape.
